ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This study was carried out under the supervision of an oversight committee composed of various agents in the Montréal food industry. The extensive and varied profiles of the committee members have been tremendously valuable. We would like to extend our sincere gratitude to them.

INTRO

How many people are hungry every day in Montréal? Who are they, where are they and what can we do to help? These are all crucial questions for the Montréal food aid community that are very difficult to answer at this time.

Hundreds of agents work every day to alleviate food insecurity in the city of Montréal. However, not all of their efforts are recognized.

When creating the Conseil du système alimentaire montréalais through the Montréal Métropole en Santé initiative, it became a priority for the main actors in this enterprise to have a clear and detailed picture of current food security practices in order to better target their approaches, and to invest time and resources on projects that will have the greatest impact on the ground and in the lives of people suffering from hunger. Moisson Montréal, who already distributes food to a network of 241 accredited organizations, was the ideal partner to conduct this study. In 2017-2018, it donated 16 million kilos of food to organizations on the island of Montréal, as well as to several other Moisson centers in Québec and other provinces.

This portrait is intended as a factual starting point for broader considerations aimed at optimizing food aid in Montréal. Its goal is to answer specific questions brought forth by each of the actors involved. We hope that each of our partners will find empirical information for their questions, so that we may further study and target new and more specific issues.

More specifically, we hope that the Conseil du système alimentaire montréalais will recognize the scope of services offered in Montréal in order to propose relevant projects. As for Moisson Montréal, this study should determine whether its food distribution is sufficient and adequately meets the needs of the community, while presenting a clear picture of the current supply so as to encourage complimentary services and not duplicate the same offers. We also believe that all players involved in food security in Montréal would benefit from becoming better acquainted with potential partners.

We hope that this overview will answer some of these questions.

2. METHODOLOGY

The initial purpose of this study was very broad. The objective was to identify all food security actors on the island of Montréal, to draw a picture of the work undertaken by these hundreds of organizations in order to identify the best practices and recommend priority actions to be undertaken within the community.

Along the way, we quickly realized that this was too broad and complex a mandate for the time and money allotted to this study. With the consent of the project's management committee, we reduced the scope of this study, and limited ourselves to identifying the parties involved in food aid in Montréal. Unfortunately, we will have to postpone our review and recommendations of the best practices to a later phase of this project.

The purpose of study therefore is to identify all the community resources for food security available to the population.

2.1. Eligibility Criteria

Any organization that provides food services to those in need was considered relevant.

The organizations selected for this survey were those that offer one or more of the following services:

- Food assistance
- Holiday baskets
- Food-sharing store
- Mobile food baskets
- Soup kitchens
- Frozen meals
- School snacks and meals
- Creative kitchens
- Community restaurants / cafeterias
- Community grocery stores
- Community fridges
- Mini-markets
- Seasonal / sustainable markets
- Food bank
- Back-to-school basket
- Meals on Wheels
- Community meals
- Snacks
- Mobile canteens
- Community kitchens
- Food-buying groups
- Community or group gardens
- Specialized cooking workshops
- Coupon groups
- Fruit and vegetable counters at low cost

2.2 Data Collection

2.2.1. Survey

In order to identify all the organizations present in Montreal, we combined various lists compiled by many regional and local agents.

In order to achieve the most complete breakdown possible, the following organizations were approached:

- Centraide of Greater Montréal
- Information and Referral Centre of Greater Montréal, 211
- Canada Research Chair in Community Approaches to Health Inequalities (CACIS)
- Coalition montréalaise des tables de quartier
- Regional Director of Public Health
- Food Justice and Sustainability in Montréal
- Community development advisors of the City of Montréal
- Regroupement partage
- Moisson Montréal
- Table de concertation sur la faim et le développement social du Montréal métropolitain

By doing so, we identified 668 organizations, groups and associations.

After removing the 241 organizations accredited by Moisson Montréal, whose services are already well known as part of food donation partners and administrators in the Hunger Count survey, we needed to become better acquainted with the 427 organizations that remained.

An initial survey was conducted with organizations in the Montréal-North borough in order to identify their missions and activities, as well as the number of food aid recipients and various socio-demographic data. This proved too cumbersome and demanding to complete. Only a small portion of the surveyed organizations responded.

In order to ensure a greater response from the organizations, a smaller, though less thorough survey was conducted, this time including only one third of the questions. Though much less detailed, these questions did provide information on the organization's main activities.

This second survey was sent to the 427 identified organizations. In order to encourage these organizations to take part in our survey, our team and referral contacts picked up the telephone and called them personally. The heads of the neighbourhood round tables, the IUHSSC community organizers and the community development officers of the City of Montréal were very supportive during this phase. All the organizations were approached directly to encourage their participation.

After considerable effort, 118 of the 427 organizations answered the survey.

2.2.2. Participation rate

Only 118 of the 427 organizations answered the survey, despite the numerous reminders sent by our team and the decrease in the number of questions in the survey. This sample represents 27% of the organizations. For the purposes of this study, we will consider it as representative, although it would have been more useful to establish a complete picture of those involved in the field, and not simply rely on an estimate.

We received many different reasons to explain this response rate, including the fact that many community organizations are experiencing a severe lack of resources and funding. As a result, the employees and volunteers involved have little time to devote to such initiatives. Also, the fact that Moisson Montréal administered this survey may have alienated some organizations that were reluctant to share their financial information or any information about their services with a regional agency, or even perhaps believing that Moisson Montréal had not sufficiently collaborated with these organizations prior to this project.

Moisson Montréal and the Conseil du système alimentaire montréalais will consider these comments and address them if a second phase of this project is considered.

2.3 Semantic considerations

We cast a very wide net in order to include as many hunger relief initiatives in Montréal as possible. In this sector, the alternative descriptions between food aid, the fight against food insecurity, food security initiatives, food assistance, emergency food aid, and so on are quite abundant. Seeing as the purpose of this study is no longer to evaluate and distinguish existing practices, we chose to use the term 'food aid' to cover all forms of food donations made to people suffering from food insecurity.

In order to simplify this text, we also use the term «organization» loosely to refer to the many different organizations, cooperatives, places of worship, initiatives and projects surveyed.

2.4 Limits of the study

This profiling of the actors in Montréal involved in food assistance does not take into consideration schools or social economy enterprises. Although many schools have set up food aid services for their students, the focus of this study was to get better acquainted with community actors. We have therefore excluded those from the public system. Furthermore, the resources available for this study were not sufficient to cover all schools in the Greater Montréal area. The only schools included in this overview are the six schools accredited by Moisson Montréal.

We also chose to exclude social economy enterprises from this study, preferring to focus our efforts on non-profit organizations, groups and associations.

3. RÉSULTS

3.1. Multiple service locations

By combining the resources of many food aid actors in Montréal, 668 community organizations were identified. This is a much higher number than we expected.

This assessment alone is extremely significant for the entire food aid network, because no single entity to date has had a complete list of all the organizations working, one way or another, to reduce food insecurity in Montréal.

3.2. Geographical distribution

Based on the data collected, the largest concentration of community organizations providing food aid is located in the Ville-Marie Borough, which encompasses 84 organizations. The Boroughs of Villeray — Saint-Michel — Parc-Extension and the Sud-Ouest are next with 65 and 60 organizations, respectively.

It should be noted that while the organizations are concentrated in the central areas of the city, nearly all sectors of Montréal have at least one source of food assistance. Of the 19 boroughs and 14 related cities, only Kirkland, Senneville, Montréal Ouest and Montréal Est do not have any organizations offering food aid.

The data collected enables us to pinpoint the locations of centres in the Montréal area, but unfortunately not the residency of the recipients. Therefore, we cannot conclude that the distribution of those suffering from food insecurity is the same as the location of the organizations. Some would argue however that community services reflect the demands of a specific neighbourhood and population. Many organizations limit their services to the residents of their borough or even smaller areas. Nevertheless, most organizations do not discriminate on the basis of place of residence, and will serve anyone who comes to them.

We thought it relevant to compare the geographical distribution of organizations based on those who come to Moisson Montréal for supplies and those who do not. Such a comparison would allow Moisson Montréal to better assess if the services it provides to community organizations are well distributed from a geographical perspective.

If we compare the six boroughs with the most organizations in each category, we notice they are not distributed evenly. While Ville-Marie has the largest number of organizations in both cases, Moisson Montréal serves a greater number of organizations in the second and third largest areas, the Sud-Ouest and Mercier-Hochelaga-Maisonneuve regions. However, the distribution of non-accredited organizations is more numerous in Villeray — Saint-Michel—Parc-Extension and Côte-des-Neiges — Notre-Dame-de-Grâce.

3.3. Portrait of the organizations

3.3.1 Types of Organizations

Who are the food aid actors in Montréal?

The organizations below are extremely diverse in their missions. In order to simplify the breakdown, we have divided them according to the nature of the missions. Table 2 shows the distribution of all 668 organizations based on their general mission.

Among the various actors in Montréal, places of worship or religious organizations and community centres are the largest providers of food assistance to people in need.

Several hypotheses, which we are unfortunately unable to confirm, can be put forward to justify why places of worship and religious organizations are the most numerous food aid providers. Traditionally, churches were places where the most vulnerable people were able to receive help. Moreover, places of worship can also be a gathering place for people of similar backgrounds from immigrant communities. Unfamiliar with the existing community resources available, newcomers in economically vulnerable situations may perhaps turn to a familiar religious institution. While these hypotheses could unfortunately not be confirmed by our survey, they are certainly worth further study.

It should also be noted that among the 153 places of worship identified, 51 were from the Conferences of the Society of Saint-Vincent de Paul. We chose to examine them separately since they are each rooted in their community. However, it should be noted that only one such actor has a very large number of affiliations.

Table 2: Breakdown of Organizations Based on their Primary Mission

3.3.2. Food Aid as a Primary Mission

In our attempt to gain more insight into current food security practices in Montréal, we believe it is important to distinguish between organizations whose primary mission is to fight food insecurity and those for whom food aid complements their basic services. This will enable us to better understand the breakdown of these actors, as well as the dynamics in place.

Table 3: Classifying Organizations that Provide Community Food Services

Primary mission focused on food aid	Food aid offered as complementary to a different mission
<ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• Food assistance</li><li>• Meal service</li><li>• Food bank</li><li>• Community grocery stores</li></ul>	<ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• Community Centre</li><li>• Home-care centre</li><li>• Youth Centre</li><li>• Youth Organization</li><li>• Multi-service day centre</li><li>• Place of worship</li><li>• Home care resource (Meals on Wheels)</li></ul>

Among all the organizations offering food assistance on the Island of Montréal, only 19.6% of them have the fight against food insecurity as their main mission. This percentage increases to 33% among Moisson Montréal's accredited organizations, which is understandable given Moisson Montréal's very mission of ensuring that an optimal food supply is given to community organizations serving those in need in Montréal.

Why do so many actors, whose primary mission is not the fight against hunger, choose to add food aid to their services? Although the response rate to this question was too low to provide a conclusive answer, feedback suggests that many organizations are seeing a significant demand for food among their recipients, and are adding food assistance to their services to fill this need. Moreover, most of these organizations work with socially or economically vulnerable individuals. It is therefore likely that many of them would want to offer a meal, snack or other form of food assistance to their recipients to encourage them to participate in other activities. Clearly, these hypotheses are worth exploring in a future study.

4. Distribution of Organizations and the Material and Social Deprivation Index

In order to more accurately determine whether the supply of food aid correlates with the needs of the population, we compared the distribution of listed organizations with the material and social deprivation index compiled by the Regional Director of Public Health<sup>1</sup>.

When comparing the geographical breakdown of food aid providers in the area with the distribution of material and social deprivation, a similar geographical pattern emerges.

Since food insecurity is strongly related to household income<sup>2</sup>, it seems relevant to compare the distribution of organizations whose main mission is food security with material deprivation.

It would be worthwhile to more thoroughly explore the distribution of material and social deprivation on the island in relation to the missions of the organizations present in the field. On the surface, it would appear that organizations working mainly on food security are more prominent in sectors where material deprivation is more widespread. This type of deprivation reflects levels of education, employment and income. Contrarily, organizations providing food aid, but whose primary mission is to address issues other than food security, appear to be more present in areas where social deprivation is present. This form of deprivation primarily reflects differences in family structure and marital status.

This seems to be the case with the Health and Social Services Centre of Bordeaux – Cartierville–Saint-Laurent, which includes the Borough of Ahuntsic-Cartierville. The latter includes a large proportion of organizations whose primary mission is food security, 17 out of 39.

By contrast, the Jeanne-Mance Health and Social Services Centre, which covers the Boroughs of Ville-Marie and Plateau-Mont-Royal, has the highest concentration of people in socially underprivileged circumstances. In these boroughs, there is a significant disparity between the number of organizations working primarily in food security, 11 and 2 organizations respectively, and those working on more general missions, 75 and 34 organizations, respectively.

This situation is not noted throughout the area, but in some cases, it provides greater insight into the availability of services offered by the community based on sector. However, different zoning practices, either by district or by IUHSSC, make such comparisons very complicated.

5. Nombre de personnes desservies par les activités d'aide alimentaire

We would be very interested in knowing exactly how many people are receiving food aid in Montréal, but many constraints in methodology make this a very difficult task.

For one, not all agencies systematically keep a record of those who receive food aid. In food banks, checking proof of identity and income is a very common practice. However, organizations offering emergency food assistance, meals and food aid services as a secondary service rarely keep a systematic count. Therefore, only an estimate of the number of recipients is available.

It is also very difficult to assess the frequency at which those suffering from food insecurity require community resources. They may visit more than one location and receive food aid from several resources, thus introducing a bias into the survey.

Moisson Montréal, in partnership with the Québec Food Banks and Food Banks of Canada, conducts a major annual survey to determine the number of people affected by food insecurity. We are referring to the Hunger Count. It is currently based on the number of individuals assisted by organizations that obtain their supplies from Moisson Montréal and on the number of food bank users who are part the provincial and national networks.

In light of the large number of organizations that do not avail themselves of Moisson Montréal's services, we can only conclude that this report is most undoubtedly incomplete. It would be rather relevant to find a more precise method to calculate the exact number of individuals helped by these 427 organizations, and include them in local, provincial and national surveys. In doing so, we would have a far clearer picture of the number of individuals suffering from food insecurity.

5.1 Future Expectations according to those Surveyed

In the interest of a greater understanding of the challenges faced by these organizations, we asked for their feedback on the services that will be required in the next 3 to 5 years in providing food aid. Of the respondents, 55% expect a rather significant increase in food aid requests, which would require an internal pooling if their resources. The reason cited most often for this possible increase is the aging of the population.

6. Supply of food assistance

6.1. Supply Sources

The organizations surveyed indicated that they obtain most of their food supplies from grocery stores. While 74% of those surveyed reported buying products at the grocery store, 34% of them reported receiving donations from grocery stores. Partner organizations and public markets are the other two most frequently identified sources for both food supplies as well as donations.

More than 45% of those surveyed said they were not interested in receiving food from Moisson Montréal. Half of them reported that they had no need for food offered by Moisson Montréal, indicating that their food supply was sufficient. Given that the majority of these organizations are not primarily concerned with addressing food insecurity, these results seem to be consistent.

Several also stated that they would like to become accredited by Moisson Montréal, but indicated that the lack of time to submit a partnership application, as well as a lack of knowledge regarding the service offered by Moisson Montréal has so far prevented them from doing so.

6.2. Sharing of Purchases

Several initiatives to share purchases and resources are currently being developed in the metropolitan area. The Conseil des industries bioalimentaires de l'île de Montréal<sup>3</sup> and the Réseau alimentaire de l'Est<sup>4</sup> recently addressed this issue. They found that organizations sharing food purchases did not have a significant impact on the actual amount spent on food purchases considering the relatively small needs of the organizations. However, shared transport and storage showed a far great potential for efficiency.

More than 40% of the organizations surveyed said they would be very interested in joining a food purchasing group initiative but they do not say they would be interested in sharing transportation, storage, or other human resources. Considering the high interest in purchase sharing among the organizations, it could be interesting to focus on small local partnerships with only a few participants so as to ensure that they remain effective and enable the organizations to save on costs.

CONCLUSION

This study has enabled us to draw up a map of the organizations offering food aid in Montréal. Although our expectations were more ambitious than the conclusions reached, we consider this to be a first essential step towards a global overview of the current actors and dynamics within the Montréal food aid community.

As a result, 668 organizations work directly or indirectly to fight food insecurity in Montréal. They seem to follow the same manner as the spread of poverty in Montréal, with services provided mainly in the central boroughs, but nevertheless, with a presence all over the city. This also serves as a reminder that hunger is present everywhere in Montréal, not just in the downtown area.

An interesting factor to note is the significant and enduring involvement of religious organizations in the fight against food insecurity. The fight against hunger, and poverty in general, is deeply rooted in the social doctrine of the Catholic Church; founded on dignity, charity and solidarity, its members always seem to be active in this fight through various initiatives. The same applies to people from different religious communities.

Furthermore, the sheer number of organizations suggests that a much larger number than the 137,000 individuals listed in the 2017 Hunger Count are receiving food assistance in Montréal. Although unfortunately, we cannot provide a more precise estimate, it is nevertheless worth considering this number, 137,000 recipients, as being the absolute minimum.

After identifying the hundreds of actors working every day to fight food insecurity in Montréal, it would also be relevant to evaluate in greater depth the various services they provide. There is a myriad of different initiatives within organizations, ranging from basic charity to social inclusion and the empowerment of individuals. All these initiatives deserve to be studied as part of a comprehensive assessment of current practices.

In fact, the approaches are very diverse and it appears that a survey to identify specific practices makes it difficult for organizations to explain their actual work in the field. The strategies are so wide-ranging that in our opinion, interviews would be more effective in identifying current practices. In fact, this is the method recommended by the Canadian Research Chair in Community Approaches and Health Inequalities, who is currently analyzing Montréal initiatives to address food insecurity.

Such a study would also allow for greater analysis on whether there is really an increase in services. While this document provides a deeper insight into the geographical dispersion of food aid organizations, this understanding can only be achieved with more information about the services and programs available to individuals. It is with this in mind that we can recommend avenues of improvement in the existing food aid system in order to promote the most effective strategies to ultimately reduce hunger in Montréal.
